From the study of Rabbi David Stern

Let immigrants be strangers no more

Passover came early for me this year – and not just because it showed up on our calendars on March 25. For me, Pesah began on Monday morning, March 4, in a convention hall in Long Beach, CA. It did not begin with matzah or sweet wine or bitter herbs. It began when I heard a 25 year-old college student named Linda (not her real name, for reasons that will become apparent) tell her story.

Linda is an undocumented resident of the United States. She grew up in Southern California, the child of a single mother from Mexico. Knowing that she was undocumented, Linda lived with a sense of both fear and striving – knowing that she was an illegal resident, she knew she could not be too conspicuous, yet was also motivated to achieve all she could to fit the stereotype of the All American girl. Linda was an outstanding student and star cheerleader. She could not go on to national cheerleading competitions because the registration required documentation that she feared would reveal her circumstances. Her mother supported their family by operating food trucks and working as a house cleaner – work required documentation that she feared from Mexico. When Linda's brother was killed in Mexico, she and her mother were unable to attend the funeral, because if they were to cross the border into Mexico they would never be able to return.

When Linda – poised, brave and articulate - stood in front of a room of close to 500 rabbis and told her story, weeks before the first seder, my Passover began. Because hers was a story I had never heard, and a story I have heard every year since I first sat in the folding chairs at the kids’ table at our family seders in the living room of my childhood home in Scarsdale, NY. Linda was a stranger to me. But since those first childhood seders, Judaism has taught me about the stranger. Thirty-six times the Torah issues commandments demanding our concern for the stranger in our midst, the most powerful occurring in Leviticus 19: “When strangers sojourn with you in your land, you shall not do them wrong. The strangers who sojourn with you shall be to you as the natives among you, and you shall love them as yourself; for you were strangers in the land of Egypt.”

I had never met Linda, but her story echoes with the stories of our Jewish generations in this land, and in all the territory we have traversed in the world. It echoes with the Exodus passage to freedom. It echoes with the names of our parents and grandparents who braved their own crossings, made their way through or around US immigration quotas, and lived hardscrabble days so that we might arrive where we are today. I proudly count the five generations my family has lived in America. And I proudly proclaim that my Jewish identity is an immigrant identity, because the passport of our history bears the stamp of all our journeys.

Multiply Linda’s story by 11 million, and you will have the chronicle of the 11 million undocumented immigrants in this country. I gave my first sermon about immigration in April of 2006, and the issue has not gone away. But now an opportunity arises again to pass comprehensive immigration reform: to make it possible for those 11 million workers to come out of the shadows; to create an earned path to citizenship; to provide an enforceable process for legalization of future immigrants; to continue to secure our borders and enforce the law; to reunite families.

Even in today’s polarized political climate, there are stirrings of bipartisan support. People of faith from every point on the religious spectrum are joining to bring about desperately needed change: from Reform Jews to evangelical Christians, we are all hearing the same call to restore family strength and human dignity and a great nation’s promise.

Passover came early this year, but its story continues. May we all give our best efforts to make it a story of freedom, decency and dignity in our own day -- so that immigrants will be strangers no more.

Theodore Bikel to share ‘remarkable gifts’ in concert, May 7

By Charlie Redden

It’s difficult to say when a storied career achieves the status of legend, but there’s no doubt it has occurred several times over in the well-lived life of Theodore Bikel.

Stage, film and television actor, musician, folk singer, composer, lecturer, author, concert performer, linguist, political activist, union leader and teacher of Jewish culture. Bikel will employ some of those remarkable gifts in concert at Temple Emanu-El on May 7 at 7:30 p.m.

Speaking to The Window from his home in California, the versatile octogenarian left no doubt as to which of the many careers he has conquered is his first love: “Standing in front of a live audience. You can feel and hear them – the intake of breath, the laugh, sometimes the cheer. Making a film is entirely different. If it’s a comedy bit, you don’t get to know if they laughed for eight months.”

Born in Austria, Bikel was barely into his teens when his family was forced to flee the gathering storm in Europe and make their way to Palestine in 1937.

“We were uprooted from our home. We saw the Nazi takeover in Austria. We had to scramble and go on the run, not knowing what gates might be open to us elsewhere. We were very lucky to get an entry visa to Palestine. Going there was both exhilarating and frightening.”

And sometimes frustrating. Filled with the natural talent of a performing artist, Bikel once recalled the work he had to do growing up: “I tried for a while to be an agricultural worker and was hopelessly bored. I would stand around in heaps of manure and sing about the beauty of the work I wasn’t doing.” He got an apprenticeship in a Tel Aviv theater. His first job was a bit part in the Sholom Aleichem drama Teyve, the Milkman. Today, it seems a singular coincidence, enough to make one believe that somebody up there had a plan.

When he comes to Dallas, Bikel will know what he’s doing in that concert only after meeting the audience. He’s not a typical modern performer who repeats the same precisely choreographed show every night in a touring season. “I never plan ahead that carefully,” he admits. “I have many songs in my knapsack. In a concert, I like to take people by the hand and lead them from genre to genre, culture to culture and language to language. It will be the cheapest travel experience they’ve ever had.”

And if the past is any guide, the stops along the way will be extraordinary.

In 1946, Bikel left the almost-state of Israel struggling for its beginning and made his way to London looking for his own, studying at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Arts. Soon he would become understudy to the two male leads in A Streetcar Named Desire opposite Vivien Leigh. He was chosen by the director, Sir Laurence Olivier. What was it like to work with such giants on his first outing? “I had nowhere to go but downhill from there,” he laughs.

In fact, he moved on quickly to larger roles and in 1954 was offered a part on Broadway. Bikel invaded America with ever-increasing energy. As his resume grew, so did his commitment to the theater. He became active in Actors Equity, the stage performers union, and rose to its presidency.

In 1959 he broke more new ground by undertaking his first musical, which also was the first collaboration of Rodgers and Hammerstein and the birth of one of theater’s most beloved shows, The Sound of Music. Bikel created the role of Captain von Trapp to Mary Martin’s Maria and instantly cemented his reputation in yet another genre.

Even before he left London, his work as an actor had caught the attention of Hollywood. In the first of his 40-odd films he was a WWI German officer threatening Humphrey Bogart and Katherine Hepburn on The African Queen, directed by John Huston, again learning a craft from the greatest names of the age on his first attempt.

During the same prolific period, Bikel dove into another art form that had been a part of his life from his youth. In 1956 he made his concert debut at Carnegie Recital Hall with a program of folk songs, music that he has never stopped singing. He went on to become a co-founder of the Newport Folk Festival, published a definitive book called Folksongs and Footnotes, appeared with symphonies and operas, composed new songs and adapted old ones, and issued a couple of dozen records of Jewish, Israeli and other folk music from around the world.

Bikel became equally renowned for his political activism. As president of an influential union, campaigner for Jewish causes, advocate for support of the arts and indefatigable purveyor of the idea of peace in the world, “I ended up on a lot of guest lists,” he says. He was on the South Lawn with President Clinton when Rabin and Arafat shook hands at the signing of the peace accords in 1993. He became friends with Clinton and treasures a photograph of himself, arm in arm, singing with Bill and Hillary.

With his late wife Tamara Brooks, a renowned composer, arranger, conductor and pianist, he later founded the folk group Serendipity 4 working with Shura Lipovsky, a noted singer of Jewish and Yiddish music, and Merima Kluae, often called the world’s foremost concert accordionist. She has performed as a guest soloist with chamber orchestras and symphonies around the globe and worked as a composer and arranger. She will be accompanying Bikel in his Dallas concert.

Gathering spaces essential in building our community

By Scott McCartney

A couple of congregants get together to talk about community projects, or Temple programs or perhaps holiday celebrations. Where do they meet? Starbucks.

Our magnificent Temple Emanu-El campus offers incredible spaces for worship and learning, large committee meetings and private discussions with clergy. But it lacks one Jewish essential: Good places to schmooze. Where do you have a cup of coffee with friends? Where do a couple of people sit and chat? The few couches scattered about and the few seats in the back-corner kitchen just aren’t very warm and welcoming. Our wonderful mid-century modern building lacks a simple social space.

The renovation and expansion of our campus will create a large “gathering space” that is essential to the future of the synagogue as a center of our Jewish community. When you walk in the “front door” – and for the first time at Hillcrest and Northwest Highway we will have a true “front door” – there will be comfortable seating and room to visit.

Before services, the gathering space will be a relaxed spot for friends to catch up. After services, it will be our intimate and warm home to onegs, kiddish luncheons and noisy receptions. During the week, kids waiting for b’nai mitzvah tutoring can have fun with Sunday school friends, do homework or check Facebook. Small meetings can break out all over. After dropping off kids, there will be a place other than the parking lot for parents to stay and chat. People from one meeting or class will run into friends from another event. There might even be some good coffee available.

More than 20 years ago sociologist Ray Oldenburg identified our need for a “third place” in our daily lives – that spot other than home or workplace where we engage. The “third place” is vital to building community. Rabbi Stern’s vision is that our synagogue will be the center of the disparate Jewish community, and our building quite literally becomes the foundation for vibrant Jewish life.

Take a look at some of the Cunningham Architects designs for the gathering space on the Temple website, www.tedallas.org. Picture yourself, your kids and your grandkids in that lovely space.

As first vice president, I meet regularly with other lay leaders and congregants. The meeting schedule has picked up with work on Our Temple | Our Future. At each meeting, I ask, “Why aren’t we meeting at Temple? Wouldn’t it be nice if we could actually do this at Temple?” Starbucks, you know, can get very crowded.
Education

Tichon: A Religious School program designed for ‘The Middle’

By Joanne Yurich

Middle school is a time when students are literally in between - no longer small children but not yet teenagers. It’s a time when they begin to push boundaries and want to spend more time on their own or with friends.

To help our “in-betweeners,” the Religious School offers “Tichon,” a unique program - named for the Hebrew word meaning “middle” - and designed to meet the specific needs and interests of this maturing age group. Students in the 7th and 8th grade enroll in Tichon and choose three electives from a list of six, ranking them in order of preference. Electives are seven weeks long and are offered on a trimester system so that students are immersed in a subject but given the chance to learn on a variety of topics. Each year, one elective is reserved for 7th or 8th grade students only and must be taken during the corresponding school year.

Henry Roseman, a Temple Emanu-El middle schooler, once thought of religious school as a “boring” way to spend his Sunday mornings. But, when he learned about Tichon, Henry was intrigued.

“I was excited, because I knew it could make religious school more exciting,” says Henry. “I could take classes I liked and learn about what I wanted to learn. It completely changed Sunday school for me.”

During the program, Henry and his classmates ventured to the Dallas Holocaust Museum - in addition to other field trips and watched cool films that made lasting impressions. But, in addition to his studies, Henry is grateful for the peers he met through Tichon.

“I’ve made friends in Tichon that I would not have otherwise made, because I get to study with different people every trimester,” says Henry.

What people said about the 2nd Connect-A-Thon...
“Thank you for calling. I always want to get more involved but don’t know how to do it”
“I love the way Temple reaches out to the community and its congregants!”
“The honesty and emotion expressed by congregants was very moving.”
Thank you

My Caring Congregation sent this beautiful blanket of many colors (just like Joseph had) to me once they were told of my cancer diagnoses. I used this blanket each and every time I went for my chemo treatments. It not only kept me warm, but gave me great comfort as well. I could not help but smile when using this blanket, as everyone commented on how beautiful it was. Ron even put the blanket in a special bag so as not to forget it when leaving for treatments. Although cancer is a terrible thing, and chemotherapy is anything but pleasant, I always felt at ease when being bundled up in my blanket. You will never know how much this blanket has meant to me, but I will always know. Although beautiful and warm, the best part was knowing that this was knitted by people at my congregation and made me feel really cared for. I would like to thank everyone involved in the making and sending of this beautiful blanket.

Hugs,
Nancy Pope

Did you know that Temple staff members participate in mitzvah work?

The Temple community and the Jewish commandment to perform mitzvot doesn’t stop with our members. Our own staff has been participating in a monthly Meals on Wheels route through VNA. Two staff volunteers sign up to make these important meal deliveries, which provides a nutritious, hot, home-delivered, mid-day meal to Dallas County residents who are unable to provide or prepare their own meals due to illness, advanced age, or disability. Every time a new year rolls around and the sign-up sheet is available, the slots are filled within no time.

Some Temple staff make it a habit to contribute to the monthly collection bins at each door as one enters the building. Be it yarn, diapers, canned goods or simply paper shopping bags, Temple staff pitches in.

Most recently, Temple staff initiated a monthly visit to various nursing facilities in which many of our members reside. Some staff are finally getting to put a face to a name they may have seen in the database or on a tribute list for years.

All have voiced extreme gratitude for having the opportunity to perform each mitzvah. And the icing on the cake has been to see the happy faces on the receiving end.

Caring Congregation

Making a difference

Peggy Zilbermann and Shelly Rosen quietly and seamlessly left their mark on hundreds of members of our congregation over the past 10 years during their Friday visits to congregants hospitalized in Baylor Hospital. The simple act of bringing Shabbat wine (actually grape juice), candles, and a challah roll has nourished many souls, most certainly helping them heal and distinctly communicating our message of being a caring congregation. Their visit and healing words will be missed, as Peggy and Shelly have decided to “retire”.

Words are inadequate to describe the impact of your acts of loving kindness. Both of you will be missed. A message for those who received hospital visits from both of these incredible women, please extend a warm thank you. We are looking for congregants who would be willing to fulfill the role for Friday visits to Baylor. Please get in touch with Alan Harris, hospital visitation coordinator, alanharris100@hotmail.com.

Grief is personal and individual

Grieving is a personal and highly individual experience. How you grieve depends on many factors, including your personality and coping style, your life experience, your faith, and the nature of the loss. The grieving process takes time. Healing happens gradually; it can’t be forced or hurried – and there is no “normal” timetable for grieving. Some people start to feel better in weeks or months. For others, the grieving process is measured in years. Whatever your grief experience, it’s important to be patient with yourself and allow the process to naturally unfold.

The next grief support series in partnership with Jewish Family Service and Temple starts Tuesday April 9, and continuing the next 5 Tuesdays through May 14th. Temple is very proud to partner with such an impactful agency by bringing grief support to our building. Topics covered include the grief process, Jewish traditions and insights, support, communication and hope for the future.

JFS counselor Deborah Leibensberger, ACSW, LCSW will facilitate and Rabbi Knight will assist with the Jewish component on the third session. Enrollment will be limited, so please register by contacting JFS at 972-437-9950 or call Peggy Papert if you have further questions.

There is also an ongoing grief support group held at JFS on the third Tuesday of each month at 1 p.m.

Troop 729 Scouts speak at Brotherhood meeting

At a recent Brotherhood monthly meeting, Scoutmaster of Troop 729 and Scouts presented an update on activities of the Troop. Each year the Troop keeps the Brotherhood informed regarding the size of the Troop and current activities the Scouts are engaged in. Scoutmaster Rich Champion spoke about much of the year’s program as well as the current growth of the Troop and anticipated hope of greater numbers to be added in time.

Introduce were Scouts who talked of various Troop events – Scout Zach Lampert spoke about the C.O.P.E. Course (Challenging Outdoor Personal Experience) which the Troop participated in for team building exercises as fun activities. Scout Jacob Lampert told about the Troop’s recent visit to the decommissioned aircraft carrier, the USS Lexington in Corpus Christi. They participated in a tour of the ship and learned about the intricacies of a ship of this size, its purpose, personnel, and mission history. They ate and slept overnight in quarters like the sailors did in WWII, and concluded with a flag ceremony. Senior Patrol Leader Gabe Noble spoke about a Campout where the Scouts learned about Skeet Shooting. For their first time, many of the Scouts fired different size shotguns, hitting clay pigeons or missing them. It did provide a contest to see who made the most hits.

At the end of the meeting, the Scouts sold popcorn to help with financing future Troop activities. Any family having a child interested in the Scouting program should call Sam Noble at 214-641-4745. Temple Emanu-El and its auxiliaries affirm the human rights values at the core of the Jewish tradition. Neither Emanu-El nor any of its auxiliaries discriminates on the basis of race, national origin, sexual orientation or disability.
