In this season of presidential political campaigns, the vitriolic rhetoric has reached a new decibel level. From the television to podcasts, it can feel like arguments move in dizzying circles, spinning farther away from the real issues and people impacted. This is one reason why I am grateful for Passover’s arrival, as our spring holiday can recalibrate us to the art of debate and disagreement, the necessity of diverse opinions, and the balance between listening and questioning.

Jews are no strangers to disagreement, as a classic joke illustrates: Two Jews, three opinions! Biblical texts are foundational to this impulse—from Jacob’s birth, he wrestles with his brother, Esau, and with angels from dawn to dusk. The desert journey is packed with arguments among Moses, the people and God, making our current political climate seem rather tame. And the body of Jewish literature that shapes the art of argument most significantly is the Talmud, a record of debates on a great diversity of subject matter, laws and customs. All is recorded: the give and take of arguments, a chorus of perspectives, and ultimately, conclusions, which are made with certain humility, knowing that over time, we can change our understanding of what God calls us to do. Future generations are welcome to add their voice into the cacophony.

The Passover Hagaddah draws from a plethora of Jewish sources, including the Talmud. In Pesachim 116a, two rabbis—Shmuel and Rav—disagree as to which of the Biblical texts encapsulate the essence of the Israelite’s experience of slavery. (CONTINUED ON PAGE 14)

THIS MONTH’S PARTNER

Attitudes & Attire

A&A helps women in difficult situations rediscover their value and self worth, plants the seeds for personal growth, and offers hope toward self-sufficiency. A&A provides workshops on self-esteem and interview skills, provides each woman with a new outfit and accessories from their boutique, as well as dental assistance.

REQUESTED DONATIONS

Women’s professional clothing and accessories including shoes, jewelry, handbags and scarves

HOW TO DONATE

Drop off items anytime in the collection bins in the Olan Sanctuary foyer or give to a staff member at an offsite event.

ONGOING NEEDS

Attitudes & Attire

Volunteers are needed Tuesday-Thursday afternoons and one Saturday a month.

Contact: Dianne Engell, dianne.engell@sbcglobal.net

Family Gateway

Family Gateway provides housing and comprehensive services to homeless children and their families. The Adopt-a-Room program will allow you to create the first impression for the children and their parents as they begin their road to self-sufficiency. Temple volunteers are asked to help prepare rooms a few times a year.

HAPPY CAMPERS

Summer is coming, and at Temple, we offer need-based scholarships so that every child can attend a Jewish summer experience. The YL + E Department, with the generous support of Women of Reform Judaism and Brotherhood, is committed to serving our families for a variety of experiences: camp, Israel travel, URJ Mitzvah Corps or other Jewish summer experiences. The entire process is confidential.

Here are the various organizations that provide scholarships in addition to Temple: Jewish Children’s Regional Service, Essie and Robert Rosenbloom Jewish Overnight Camping Fund, Jewish Federation of Greater Dallas, One Happy Camper, Greene Family Camp

CAMP K’TON
The Art of the Argument

Should we focus on the physical or spiritual enslavement? The medieval rabbis who edited the Hagaddah kept the Talmudic spirit of questioning the story of our slavery and liberation at the core of the Passover experience. The disagreement between Shmuel and Rav is just one example among many that encourages us to question, probe and debate the very essence of the Exodus story and the way it translates into our lives today.

At Passover and all year round, we are challenged to live out the values demonstrated in Talmudic discourse. Disagreeing with one another in a respectful and constructive way can be very challenging. We know this from our most intimate relationships, our seder tables, our public forums. Like any spiritual and intellectual practice, it takes mindfulness and awareness of self and other.

We are fortunate to have many opportunities at Temple to practice disagreeing respectfully, whether it is at Talmud and Chever Torah classes, in committee and board meetings, even playfully in our annual Purim spiel. If you are in a Sh’ma Group, a small group cadre under the auspices of Sh’ma Emanu-El, you’ll have a chance this month to further explore this topic. This month’s conversation is entitled, “How do we disagree?” and you can find out more about it here: www.tedallas.org/community/learning-materials.

I’d like to share a powerful quote I found in the Sh’ma Group learning materials on the art of argument, one that I will include in the conversations at my seder table. It’s by Rabbi Melissa Weintraub and Dr. Eyal Rabinovitch, Co-Directors of Resetting the Table, a program of the Jewish Council for Public Affairs: “Rather than listening to find flaws, we [seek to] listen to help others articulate what matters most to them. We listen to identify the concerns, values, emotions, and stories that drive them. More generally, we alter our intention from winning an argument to seeking out comprehensive understanding. When I demonstrate that I have both the desire and willingness to understand you as you wish to be understood, when I prove to you that I see you as you wish to be seen, I maximize the likelihood that you will listen to me in return.”

In a season marked with political polarization and a stubborn resistance to “identify the concerns, values, emotions and stories that drive” others, it is all the more important for us to practice the art of argument, to learn how to disagree. We are called to do so as human beings and as Jews, to do our part in bringing greater liberation to ourselves and the world.

Annual Campaign Needs You!

We are wrapping up the Annual Campaign and are very close to our goal. If you haven’t given yet or if circumstances allow you to increase your gift, please donate today. Your gift allows us to sustain every aspect of Temple Emanu-El – your home of sacred encounter.
