UPDATE: As of press time, COVID-19 response is dictating our program schedule moving forward. Please follow us online at tedallas.org or our Facebook page to verify all April and May dates, times and locations. Temple is here for you even in this difficult time.
In a given day or week many of us unconsciously think in terms of questions: What’s for dinner? What’s my schedule tomorrow? What are our plans for Saturday night? Will the weather be nice this weekend? As humans we spend much of our time during the day contemplating events that lie on the horizon. We’re predisposed, even from an early age to think and live in the future, “What do you want to be when you grow up?” asks the kindergarten teacher.

Psychologist Martin Seligman argues that human beings—Homo sapiens, the wise man, are “more aptly named, Homo prospectus, because we thrive by considering our prospects.” Our intellectual capacity and wisdom actually stem from our ability to consider and plan for what may happen near or far in the future. This skill differentiates us from other species who comprehend the immediate future in terms of cause and effect: you arrive home and pick up the leash, your dog gets excited for a walk.

When we pause to consider this human habit we realize how essential our planning can be. Intentional choices reduce anxiety and often lead to better outcomes in our lives. But we can also identify a tension between spending too much time on “what could be” at the expense of being fully immersed in the present: the individual relationships with cherished family, friends, and community; standing as witness to both justice and injustice in our world. What helps us find a balance?

The holiday of Passover poses a direct and valuable challenge to our human instinct to think more about our own futures than about the needs of the present. Passover has us look back, saying, “Remember! Learn from your past.” Each spring the words of our sacred Haggadah remind us, “in each generation, each person is obligated to see himself or herself (lirot et atmzo) as though he or she personally came forth from Egypt.” The creative rituals of the Seder meal—bitter/sweet/salty dips, four questions, drips of wine for each plague, retelling the exodus story, and the joyous songs of freedom—all of these help us see ourselves at each step along the journey from slavery to redemption. Through these actions we’re supposed to understand the feelings of slavery and re-create the experience of redemption as present-day event.

Passover asks us to make this journey of memory by being more mindful of freedom in the world. Similar to other holidays such as Shabbat, where we rest in gratitude to God for all of creation, or Simchat Torah, when we dance with unbridled joy to express gratitude for Torah in our lives, Passover intends that we express our gratitude for freedom. But gratitude is only part of the picture. Passover ultimately expects us to shift our frame of reference about the world. We look into our collective past and attempt to see ourselves as we would each have personally experienced slavery. This task is a practice of introspection and reflection, rather than prospection.

On Passover we ask ourselves—we would we have believed in God’s redemptive power and Moses’s leadership? Could we have endured Egyptian bondage and remained ever hopeful? And, while mustering the spiritual strength it takes to honestly answer these questions, we then turn and look out to our world through this shifted perspective, the viewpoint of the slave, and ask: what injustices do we now recognize in our own community that before we overlooked? How has our human habit of focusing on our own futures blinded us to the needs of others in the here and now?

As Rabbi Jill Jacobs reminds us, the text of the Sephardic Haggadah perhaps best expresses our task of reframing during Passover. The Sephardic text commands, “Show [not just see] oneself (l’haret et atmzo) as having come forth from Egypt.” With the addition of a single Hebrew letter ‘hey,’ this version changes the obligation from one commanding personal reflection to one governing the way in which one acts in the world. By leveraging our past, Passover asks us to become keenly aware of our human tendencies to think only of ourselves and our futures, and instead practice humility and justice through our actions."

In this way we might move a step closer to fully utilizing the wisdom we’ve all inherited from Our Creator.

Reframing during Passover
A Note from Shmuly Yanklowitz, Visiting Rabbi

I CAN’T WAIT TO JOIN YOU IN DALLAS
at the great Temple Emanu-El for an exciting weekend of learning. There is so much to discuss together about how our inner lives can mold our outer lives and vice versa. Indeed, we can uproot from within ourselves that which we despise most in others. When we see ourselves targeted with hate we must fight it, but we must also take the opportunity to ensure that the characteristics of hatred and bigotry will not exist within ourselves or our community. Thus, now is the time for spiritual resistance.

But what is spiritual resistance? For me, the term is typified by seeking positive reactions to negative forces in the world. This not only means activism and advocacy but also includes a process of looking inward to ensure that we represent the opposite of what we detest in the world.

The steps to spiritual resistance follow a simple rubric:

• When we encounter evil, we should respond in a manner designed to erase that evil.
• When we see arrogance, let’s vow to be more humble.
• When we see bullying, let’s pledge to be more empathetic.
• When we hear blatant lies, let’s work to erase that evil.
• When we observe greed, let’s locate the greed in us that needs to be addressed.
• When we become aware of systemic racism, sexism, and hate from national leadership or from individuals with whom we interact in our daily lives, let’s work to uproot those evils within ourselves.

These guidelines are only an entry point into changing behavior through positive thought. A teaching attributed to the Baal Shem Tov, the founder of Hasidut, states that a truly righteous person sees themselves within the sinner. He teaches: “Your fellow is your mirror. If your own face is clean, so will be the image you perceive. But should you look upon your fellow and see a blemish, it is your own imperfection that you are encountering—you are being shown what it is that you must correct within yourself.”

Friends, together, we can build spiritual communities for learning, growth, and reflection. By transforming our own character and moral consciousness, we will be equipped to foster a more justice society together.

Growing Beyond Tolerance

Is it possible to bring together a group of Jewish, Christian, and Muslim women and see them progress from strangers into a close-knit sisterhood of tolerance, genuine respect, and love? If this could be accomplished, might it provide hope for world peace?

These were the questions that impelled Dallas social worker Janice Lord to organize Daughters of Abraham in a post 9/11 environment. Scouring the community for women who would put aside their vulnerability and reach out in courage to those of other faiths, she persisted until she had a small group that included women of all three faiths. Since 2002 when a few people first met in Arlington, the group has attracted the attention of hundreds of women across the Metroplex, including Temple’s own Women of Reform Judaism. Leah Beth Kolni has been attending meetups since Temple first got involved in 2012.

“I grew up in southeast Texas and did not have the opportunity to know any Muslim people,” says Kolni. “It has been wonderful to meet Muslim women and realize that we have so much in common. Getting to know and become friends with women of not only the Muslim faith, but also Christian women I might not have met under any other circumstance has been extremely rewarding personally.”

Sharing traditions, building friendships, and growing with love.

From the beginning, the women in Daughters of Abraham were committed to a participatory, democratic structure rather than forming a non-profit organization, which entailed a vertical structure with officers. Responsibilities have been shared by each faith. The monthly gatherings rotate from synagogue to mosque to church, with the host faith providing a discussion facilitator and light refreshments.

“So many stereotypes have been erased as we learn from each other as individuals. We all come to understand that we are more alike than we are different and that leads to a very meaningful opportunity for personal growth.”

Aware that violent behavior often stems from prejudice and misinformation, the group reaches into the community to model their experience of working together in peace and harmony. According to Kolni, women from Temple Shalom, Beth El Binah, Shearith Israel and Congregation Shaare Tefilla have attended the Dallas meetups, which often attract up to 50 women in attendance each month. Meetings are also held in Fort Worth and Denton.

“The women who participate are very often surprised and delighted to find how similar our beliefs are and that being open to learning about other religions makes a person appreciate and want to learn more about her own faith,” she says.

Temple women members interested in attending a Daughters of Abraham meetup, please contact Leah Beth Kolni at leahbkolni@gmail.com.

Passover is perhaps the most widely observed holiday of the entire year, and many families have long-standing, beloved traditions that have been passed down from generation to generation. An important Jewish value is to invite strangers to the Passover Seder, which celebrates freedom. We remember that once our people were strangers in a strange land, vulnerable, without rights or protection, subject to oppression, cruelty and slavery. As we ascend the 15 steps of the Seder, we literally taste the bitterness of our oppression and are reminded of what it feels like to be the stranger, unwelcomed, with no one to come to our aid.

The time is now to be bold in committing to our older adults both in how we welcome them inside and outside this soul-filling campus…
We were pleased that 120 members participated in 15 separate conversations, all responding to the same questions.

So, what’s next in the process?

CHRIS: To ensure our more senior members continue to have sacred encounters at and with Temple we’re forming a group of leaders to review the recommendations of the Task Force and determine what action items to assign to the appropriate committees or councils across Temple. We want this to not only live with one committee but encourage all committees to use a lens of inclusion during their planning stages.

Who will oversee the implementation of recommendations and who will be monitoring the progress? Is it too late for others to get involved?

CHRIS: Once the oversite team presents the recommendations to the relevant committees, our Temple Vice Presidents will work with the different groups on implementation and report back to the Executive Committee and Board on progress.

We’re always open to people’s suggestions and active involvement. If you want more information about the task force work, recommendations or how you can get involved, contact me directly or Karen Hoffman, Associate Executive Director, at Temple.

This was a big task to undertake.

CHRIS: Yes, and I’d like to thank all who took time to help with this important work of inclusion, with a special shout-out to Meredith Pryzant for her extraordinary staff leadership on this task force. I’m always so inspired by the love and care shown in this place and how we strive to fulfill our core values by being a community of warm welcome, meaningful relationships, and mutual responsibility.

I’d also like to add the closing comments that were presented in the report to the Board. “The time is now to be bold in committing to our older adults both in how we welcome them inside and outside this soul-filling campus. The time is now to acknowledge what we heard this time when we asked our older adults what they want and need.

In her Rosh Hashanah morning service last September Rabbi Robbins shared that, “On Rosh Hashanah we consider the nourishment we receive from those who came before us, AND how our lives will provide the nourishment for future gardens.” The time is now for us to honor our older adults who planted so many seeds in this congregational garden by demonstrating with words and actions that we have heard, that we understand and that we will act to deepen their connections while we continue to plan for the future of Temple Emanu-El.”

Some of the recommendations of the Older Adult Task Force include, but are not limited to, both immediate action items and some that may take more time to allocate resources and planning.

Immediate Action

- Address transportation for older adults and accessibility for all congregants.
- Publicize and promote the availability of reimbursement for rides to and from UPB services, special and holiday congregational services and dinners, for those in need.
- Recruit additional welcome team volunteers specifically to assist congregants with mobility devices during Shabbat services.
- Provide opportunities for older adults to interact socially without a specific programmatic agenda.

Intermediate Action (2020/2021)

- Maximize opportunities to engage older adults with clergy, especially those who do not require pastoral attention.
- Provide opportunities for older adults to build social connections before and after existing programs during 2020-2021 program calendar process.
- Plan opportunities to educate older adults about the transition from Classical Reform to today’s Reform Worship style, while providing ongoing conversations and commitments to creating worship experiences that are meaningful to this population.

Long -Term Action (2021/2022)

- Create intergenerational programming opportunities that specifically pair older adults with ECEC, YLE, Kol Shir Youth Choir, B’nai Mitzvah and Confirmation students. Specific ideas focused on storytelling for Temple’s upcoming sesquicentennial, visiting senior living facilities and Shabbat activities.
- Create and celebrate new rituals/milestones for older adults including home transitions, having grandchildren, retirement and other later-in-life benchmarks.
- Transport existing Temple programming to senior living facilities and older adult communities using technology, maximizing program staff, and leveraging clergy resources. Examples include The Conversation Project, Clergy Lunch and Learns, Sh’ma Emanu-El groups.
- Create programming tailored to older adults both at Temple and for “road shows” to senior living facilities and older adult communities. Examples include modern Jewish authors, death and dying, meaning of Yizkor, societal changes, Hartman Institute, Jewish Holiday discussion, Rabbi Zimmerman, interfaith discussion and dialogue.
Spring Into Gardening

In the Jill Stone Community Garden, the brisk winter winds did howl. There were freezes, clouds, rain and the occasional sunny day but little warming February. In spite of the weather, the garden was gifted with wonderful new volunteers, including 9-year-old Abby, working very hard renewing the pathways with wood chips. Some of our volunteers were also low in height but tall in spirit. Children from the Early Childhood Education Center picked 15lbs of kale to donate to the Vickery Meadow Food Pantry one. To them and our volunteers of all ages, thanks for coming out in chilly February.

This time of year, it’s all about the greens. They like this weather and put on a good show. This is the first winter we have had use of 18 new beds, constructed over the summer, compliments of the Kleinman family. It has made a tremendous difference in the amount of delicious organic produce we contributed to the food pantry. In February we donated 172lbs in one month! Yep, that’s a lot of leaves. Our Wednesday garden wrangler, Lori Droppo, shows up in rain, snow, sleet and wind with her crew harvesting those greens. As she says, “no matter the weather, people need to eat!”

Our Greenhouse wranglers have started tomatoes, peppers, eggplant, herbs and the occasional flower in little pots. The sprouts spend their childhood in the warmth and humidity of the greenhouse getting ready for the big show (when there is no longer a chance of frost and the soil temperature is consistently warm.) As you can imagine, predicting frost is a bit of a gamble. Last fall, we were not expecting a frost until November but it came before October—the earliest in 28 years! So we have become consummate weather watchers when deciding when to get the plants transferred to the outside beds. Then we pray for a good growing season.

Volunteers are the ones that keep our little garden thriving. You can join other gardeners any Sunday at 9AM or Wednesday at 8AM. No experience necessary. We provide the know-how; you bring the gusto!

Annual Fund Spotlight: Gary Kahn

For legacy member Gary Kahn, Temple carries a deep and special connection.

How has Temple Emanu-El been here for you throughout your life? It has been my privilege to be a lifelong member of Temple Emanu-El, our family’s spiritual home. Over my lifetime, so many of our family’s most treasured memories were hosted at Temple. For sheer joy, it is hard to top the baby namings of our two children: Lauren in 1983, Michael in 1985. As parents, we were so proud to watch our children’s Bat and Bar Mitzvah, respectively. But in the circle of life, there is both a beginning and an end. In 2013, when we received the devastating news that my beloved wife, Beth, had been diagnosed with stage 4 glioblastoma, the outpouring of love and support from the rabbinical staff and broader Temple community was overwhelming and was a tremendous source of strength and comfort for our family. Rabbis David Stern and Nancy Kasten, who live around the corner, were always available to Beth and our entire family during this very difficult and sad time. No words can adequately express how grateful we are for all of their love and guidance. Because of Beth’s love for teaching young children and deep commitment to Temple, our family is so proud to honor her memory with the Beth F. Kahn Roots & Wings classroom in the ECEC.

How do you feel being a Temple member? Our family is extraordinarily proud to have been associated with the Temple since its very earliest days. My great grandfather, Simon Linz, and his wife Beccie, joined the Temple in 1891 and established a tremendous legacy of giving and community leadership. I am so proud that my two grandsons, William (5) and Charlie (2) are sixth generation members of Temple.

How do you envision Temple for future generations? As we start to approach the celebration of our 150th Anniversary, I could not be more excited about the future of our Temple and the important role it will play for future generations. With our nationally recognized clergy staff, led by our senior Rabbi David Stern, and the strong and highly strategic leadership provided by our Board, there is no question that Temple will continue to have a vital role in our community and city. What has historically made Temple such a special place, our core Jewish values, commitment to learning and focus on social justice and helping others, as well as our willingness to grow and change with the times, is a timeless message that continues to resonate with our future generations.

Tell us about your role with the Annual Fund. I feel privileged to be a part of an incredible team of dedicated volunteers who are so committed to supporting the exciting programs and initiatives of our Temple. Under the direction of Mary Lee Broder, our goal in 2020 is to raise in excess of $1.2 million from a minimum of 1,000 participants. My specific role is to focus on the 60’s age group in addition to reaching out to members of the congregation who have not previously donated to the Temple. It is tremendously rewarding to visit with our members about all of the amazing ways Temple positively impacts our lives and why it is so important for all of us to give generously to the Annual Fund.

Why is it important for people to give to Temple, no matter of one’s financial circumstances? For as long as I can remember, Temple Emanu-El has been blessed to have extraordinarily dedicated and inspirational leaders who, working hand in hand with the clergy, have built one of the strongest, most highly regarded Jewish congregations in our country. Once you have spent any time in or around the Temple, whether it’s the High Holy Day services, the ECEC, Adult Learning programs or our important social justice initiatives, it does not take long to realize how truly blessed we are to have such a vibrant, inclusive and caring community which we can be so proud of. To ensure that our children and our children’s children are as fortunate, it is vitally important that we continue to invest in our future. No matter your age or financial constraints, when we give, we improve the lives of others and feel better connected to our spiritual home, Temple Emanu-El.

Jewish Culinary Traditions and How Eating Customs Shape Jewish Identity

April 30 | 7PM | Stern Chapel

Register: participate.tedallas.org/kbaumlecture

Taught by Rabbi Dr. Shira Lander, senior lecturer and director of Jewish Studies at SMU. Jews have historically embraced the physical dimension of human existence by sanctifying its mundane aspects. Due to the frequency of Jewish migration, Jews imbued portable objects rather than stationary ones with particular significance. What meanings do Jews share regardless of their broader cultural contexts? What meanings are distinctive to the particular contexts of individual communities?

With gratitude to the Katherine F. Baum Adult Education Fund

The Katherine F. Baum Adult Education Fund was established in 2005 by Lester Baum, in memory of his wife, Kathi, an eternally curious learner who embraced all aspects of Judaism and Jewish life. Kathi’s keen insights, wisdom and magnetic personality are fondly remembered by all who knew her. A lifelong member of Temple Emanu-El, Kathi’s love of Judaism led to her becoming an adult Bat Mitzvah in the last two years of her life. This course honors the memory of Kathi, a seeker of knowledge and truth.

BROTHERHOOD ISRAEL BOOK CLUB

“Catch 67: The Left, The Right and the Legacy of the Six-Day War” by Micah Goodman

Since the Six-Day War, Israelis have been entrenched in a national debate over whether to keep the land they conquered or to return some, if not all, of the territories to Palestinians. In 2017, bestselling Israeli author Micah Goodman published a balanced and insightful analysis of the situation that quickly became one of Israel’s most debated books of the year. Now available in English translation with a new preface by the author, “Catch 67: The Left, The Right and the Legacy of the Six-Day War” deftly sheds light on the ideas that have shaped Israelis’ thinking on both sides of the debate, and among secular and religious Jews about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

Goodman, an Israeli philosopher, teacher and author known for his clear thinking and ability to break down complex concepts, is the author of four best-selling books in Israel including “Maimonides” and the “Book That Changed Judaism.”

Contrary to opinions that dominate the discussion, he shows that the paradox of Israeli political discourse is that both sides are right in what they affirm—and wrong in what they deny. Although he concludes that the conflict cannot be solved, Goodman is far from a pessimist and explores how instead it can be reduced in scope and danger through limited, practical steps. Through philosophical critique and political analysis, Goodman builds a creative, compelling case for pragmatism in a dispute where a comprehensive solution seems impossible.

Says Jonathan Kirsch of the Jewish Journal, “Catch-67 is a book that dares to imagine a solution to one of the most intractable geopolitical conflicts in the long history of the Jewish people, but Goodman also embraces a more modest goal: ‘I have sought throughout to acquire an understanding heart; to listen with empathy to different viewpoints; and, guided by the spirit of the Talmud, to try to rehabilitate Israel’s fractured conversation.’ In that effort, he has succeeded magnificently.”

Most of the book is devoted to how that came to be. Goodman offers a careful, even-handed analysis of what he calls “the seventh day of the Six-Day War, which has gone on now for more than 50 years.” In proposing a partial-peace plan, he calls for more humility than ideology through a restructuring of the conflict “from the bottom up,” like agreeing on new borders — not to result in peace but “in order to better manage a state of war, as and when it resumes.”
Is ADHD a “new” diagnosis?
ADHD was first identified in the early 1900’s by British pediatrician, Sir George Sill, as “an abnormal defect of moral control”. He identified a group of children who could not have control over their behavior as others their age and with their intellectual capacity did. The disorder was first identified in the diagnostic and statistical medical manuals of disorders (DSM) in the second edition in 1967 as “hyperkinetic impulsive disorder”. It wasn’t until 1980 that it was called ADD (Attention Deficit Disorder); ADD with hyperactivity and ADD without hyperactivity. By the late 1980s, the American Psychiatric Association changed the name to ADHD (Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder). It was later distinguished by the three subtypes that are currently used: ADHD Predominantly Inattentive Presentation, ADHD Predominantly Hyperactive/ Impulsive presentation, and ADHD Combined Presentation. Furthermore, in the mid 1990s, researchers identified that ADHD is not limited to just a childhood disorder.

What are some common myths associated with ADHD?
There are many; however, some of the more frequently heard ones blame technology and bad diet for the diagnosis, assume that it only affects kids, or insist that all kids with ADHD are wild and uncontrollable. All of these are fallacies.

Can ADHD be cured?
ADHD cannot be cured; however, medication and other natural dopamine releasers, such as exercise, can help treat ADHD in order for someone to develop more manageable systems for productivity. Additionally, other treatments, such as ADHD coaching and/or therapy, can also help individuals use their keen sense of intuition, creativity and out-of-the-box thinking (often common characteristics of individuals with ADHD) to live happy, productive and fulfilling lives.

Come join Hilary Kreisler Stern, Educator, Certified ADHD Life Coach and ADHD Consultant as she raises awareness and dispels myths about ADHD, while helping parents identify ways to make living with a child with ADHD or ADHD symptoms more manageable and enjoyable for everyone in the household.

Contact: Rabbi Amy Ross, rross@tedallas.org

Hilary K. Stern, M.Ed., CALC, is an ADHD Life Coach and Consultant and the Founder of ADHD Advance Coaching and Consultant, located here in Dallas. Her desire to become a credentialed ADHD Life Coach was solidified after finding out that, just as she had been diagnosed in high school, one of her four children was identified as having ADHD. Currently, she is also on the committee for the annual International ADHD Conference, being held in Dallas November 5-7, 2020. Prior to her presentation at Temple on April 26, Hilary gave us some insight to a diagnosis that affects over 5 million children, and an estimated 4% of all American adults.

Jewish Disability Awareness, Acceptance, and Inclusion Month (JDAIM) is a unified effort among Jewish organizations worldwide to raise awareness and foster acceptance and inclusion of people with disabilities and mental health conditions and those who love them.

Throughout the month of February, the ECEC engaged our students and staff in experiences that allowed us to be more accepting and inclusive towards those with special rights.

We had several guest speakers visit with our Threes, Pre-K and Kindergarteners. Leanna Kimbrell spoke with the children about living with Cerebral Palsey and gave them the opportunity to ask her questions. Drummer and temple member Tony Harper came to play for us. Tony was born with a congenital limb difference which eventually resulted in the need for his leg to be amputated and a prosthetic leg in its place. He amazed everyone as he rocked the drums and all of us with his talents.

In the Atelier, the older children were introduced to four artists who have special rights. After learning about the artists, the children then created in the same manner that the artists do. When Matisse required the use of a wheelchair later in his life, he continued creating art by using cut paper and creating collages. Artist Alison Lapper was born without arms and has shortened legs. She is an accomplished artist and public figure who paints using her mouth to hold the brush. John Branblitt, a Denton, Texas artist, lost his vision at the age of 30. Known as The Blind Painter, Bramblitt uses his sense of touch to help him create painted works of art. He recently created a four-story mural in Dallas’ Bishop Arts District.

Aaras Othman, a Kurdish artist who lost his arms when he was young, paints with his feet. He has not allowed his childhood injury to keep him from his passion for creating art.

During our Special Rights Inclusion Days, the children went to different stations where they had the opportunity to experience various disabilities. The mobility station challenged them to use a wheelchair to get from one place to another. They experienced trying to talk with a speech impediment and practiced asking someone to repeat themselves when they didn’t understand what they were being asked to do. They went shopping in a dark market, finding the items on their shopping list. Working in teams, the children were tasked with reading a Lego manual and creating structures, all while wearing mittens that limited their fine motor skills. Children were asked to complete simple tasks in a room filled with distractions, allowing them to experience how important it is to self-regulate their sensory needs. In the final station children experienced what it would be like to live with hearing loss. They were asked questions but unable to hear the questions being asked.

Each year the ECEC engages in a mitzvah project. This year, we opened our doors and invited community members with special rights from organizations such as Chai House and the Autism Treatment Center of Dallas. Participants were buddied up with our staff members to dance, create jewelry, play games and eat delicious snacks! Both staff and participants are already asking if we can do it again soon!

Above: Working in teams, children were tasked with reading a Lego manual and creating structures while wearing mittens that limited their fine motor skills. At Left: Children experienced creating art without having vision.
In bluegrass, rags-to-riches stories are revered and glamorized, strong personal convictions are lauded, off-stage legends of wit and badassery are currency, and a sharp suit (rhinestones optional) and western hat speak volumes. There’s a notable correlation between the success of the genre’s greats and the presence of their personalities, perspectives, and stories throughout their art. The relatability, accessibility, and appeal of their songs can often be attributed not only to the level of talent, but also to the boldness with which their true selves are communicated, musically, to an audience. Roots music fans have always been hungry for indicators of an artist’s authenticity — a way to winnow out the performative, commercial aspects intrinsic to the recording industry and leave just the juiciest nuggets of “real life.”

Attempting to follow in that tradition and feed that hunger is Nefesh Mountain. Musical partners Eric Lindberg and Doni Zasloff want nothing more than to have the lens of their entire identities filtered through their brand of crisp, refined, and timeless bluegrass in myriad ways — tangible or intangible. Overly, we hear this perspective in vocals sung in Hebrew, lyrical hooks derived from Jewish sayings, and a grassy cover of Irving Berlin’s “Russian Lullaby.” Deeper, more subliminally, we find that the themes of family bonds, a love for home, a respect for nature, and prayers for peace and empathy comforting our ears also stem from their Jewish background.

But the specificity of this origin point is neither alienating or confusing. Rather, it reinforces two truths about this music: Bluegrass is for everyone, and bluegrass is indeed better when the people who make it shine brightly throughout it.

Nefesh Mountain is the place where American Bluegrass and Old-time music meet with Jewish Heritage and tradition. The result of this unexpected and beautiful mix is staggering; and while complete with the kind of adept string virtuosity and through composed arrangements one would hope for from a newgrass band with influences from Bluegrass, Old-Time, Celtic, and Jazz, they also play and sing songs of the heart creating music with a sense of diversity, oneness, and purpose for our world today.

William (Billy) Pearlstone Budner was born in 1929 to William and Lorraine Budner. Billy grew up at Temple, graduated from Highland Park High School and from Southern Methodist University. He first contracted polio at age 17, but recovered and went on to serve as a sergeant in the U.S. Army during World War II. He and his wife, Joan, had three daughters, Lori Jo, Cynthia, and Nancy and settled in Dallas, continuing the multi-generational family membership of the Pearlstones, Loebs, and Budners. In 1956, at only 29 years old, Billy had a second polio attack that ultimately resulted in his death. His name should be familiar to ECEC and YLE families, as the William P. Budner Library was established in his honor.

Rabbi Yanklowitz, a noted scholar and activist, reexamines the power of interfaith partnerships and how that spirituality can motivate and inform progressive activism. He argues that progressives have been turned off by the hypocrisy of religious influence on current policies and thus have neglected to cultivate key relationships within the religious community, a community that is ripe with experience. Because of this, progressives do not truly understand the power of the universal language found in religion when expressed solely for the purpose of social justice. Yanklowitz proposes that progressive activists need to understand and cultivate these missing spiritual tools in order to lead affirmative change. This is a must-read for social justice warriors.

Temple is welcoming Rabbi Shmuly Yanklowitz on April 17-18 as scholar-in-residence. He will be talking about his bestselling book, “Pirke Avot: A Social Justice Commentary” (see details on page 3.)
