PASSOVER 2018
Share Our Story, Share Your Table

COVER STORY PP. 10-11
I had the privilege of spending time with our Reform movement leadership in Jerusalem last fall, and of all my experiences thus far as CCAR President, November 16, 2017 stands out for me as a day of power and promise. Some of that day was covered in the media: Here is my experience of it in four chapters.

Chapter One: At 8 AM, more than 100 Reform Jews gathered for a glorious morning service on the temporary platform near Robinson’s Arch, south of the Western Wall Plaza. A sun-dappled morning, first-year Reform cantorial and rabbinic students along with us gray-hairs, men and women, Israelis and North Americans, clergy and lay leaders. We shared a surging sense of joy and solidarity, and a profound sense of place.

Chapter Two: At the conclusion of the service, we processed in song to the security gates at the entrance to the Western Wall Plaza, eight of our men and women leaders holding Torah scrolls. Then came the well-publicized confrontation with those who tried to keep us out. We said yes, they said no. We claimed our right, they denied it. They blocked, we pushed through. Once we were through the first gates, they tried to set up others. Once we were gathered at the flag, they tried to tear a Torah scroll from one of our leaders’ arms. We held on.

The confrontation was predictable, somewhat planned, and still harrowing. I had seen similar circumstances on video, but never experienced this directly. The tug-of-war over Torah was raw and real, the rift within our Jewish family heartbreaking. I thought a lot about political theater, embodied spirituality, how most of the protests I participate in at home are safe and staid. I celebrated anew the courage of every sister and brother in our Israeli movement who insists on claiming the justice, dignity and respect we deserve.

I worried that these acts of confrontation—necessary and just as they are—might define our Reform movement too narrowly to the Israeli public. We know we stand for so much more, from marriage rights to funding for our growing communities to contemporary and creative expressions of Jewish spirituality.

Chapter Three: From public space to private space: When we returned from the Kotel, I had the privilege of meeting with four representatives from the leadership of MARAM, our Israeli Reform rabbinic organization, in a conversation that was quiet, thoughtful, and filled with promise. Some of it was organizational—MARAM is growing and seeks the help of the CCAR in best practices for an increasingly larger and more complex rabbinic organization. But the opportunity for us American rabbis to learn from our Israeli colleagues is great as well, from the crafting of creative rabbinites to helping us think more deeply about Israeli society and Israel-Diaspora relationships.

Chapter Four: That Thursday was the culmination of four days of enriching meetings of the Board of Governors of the Hebrew Union College-Jewish Institute of Religion, our Reform seminary and training ground for all Reform Jewish professionals. And Thursday night was the culmination of the culmination: the ordination of the 100th Israeli Reform rabbi. That number is testimony to the dynamic growth of Reform Judaism in Israel, and the ceremony was exciting and inspiring. It was just the healing, hopeful and joyous end that a deeply complicated day required. We have great reason to be proud of the trailblazing work of our movement in Israel—more than 100 rabbis and counting, serving in a growing number of congregational and non-congregational settings, with more and more Israelis each year exposed to the beauty and power of a Reform approach to Judaism that is contemporary, inclusive and uplifting.

I concluded the day hoping that my heart will be big enough to hold all of this: the power of prayer and the power of protest, the public stage and the quiet consultation, policy and presence and struggle and joy. Big enough to hold the pain of the confrontation at the Kotel, and big enough to know that, for all the headlines, it was only one chapter of the four. Big enough to know, elated and depleted and Ben-Gurion bound, that this long day was indeed a day of blessing.

PASSOVER 2018
Share Our Story, Share Your Table

This month, our thoughts turn from totally ’80s Purim to totally timeless Passover. The 15th of Nisan begins at sundown on Friday, March 30. And there’s no better way to get ready than to take advantage of Temple’s awesome lineup of art, seder table matching, social justice, food (and more food) and prayer. So clear the chametz and get ready to make the most of this thrilling time in the Jewish calendar. Slavery to redemption, narrow spaces to open places, pilgrimage and prophets—chag sameach!
“Let all who are hungry come and eat.”

The Passover Hunger Relief Drive is under way. Please contribute funds at the address below. All funds will be distributed to our partners, including but not limited to Vickery Meadow Food Pantry, Jewish Family Service, North Texas Food Bank and North Dallas Shared ministries.

Get Counted: Make your online donation at partipacate.tedallas.org/hungerrelief.

“Not your Bubbe’s Seder”

So you haven’t yet mastered gefilte fish? Don’t care to? No worries! Atid, Temple’s community of 20s and 30s adults, is sponsoring a series of second seders in peoples’ homes.

The Art of Passover

March 25-April 8, Tycher Gathering Space
Experience Passover through art!
Temple will host an exhibit of prints of Mark Podwal’s collection of Passover inspired artwork, as seen in “Sharing the Journey: The Haggadah for the Contemporary Family,” in our public spaces during the holiday. Copies of Mark’s Haggadah will also be for sale in Judaic Treasures, where you can shop for all your Passover needs!

The Sacred Seder Table

Wednesday, March 21, 7pm, Linz Hall
A rabbi, food historian and chef walk into Linz Hall…. want to know the rest? You won’t want to miss this lively and informative conversation with Rabbi Daniel Utley, food historian and cookbook author Tina Wasserman, and chef Eli Cohn-Wein of Zoli’s as they discuss the meanings and origins of quintessential Passover foods, and how to make traditional holiday foods new with modern recipes.

Co-hosted by Women of Reform Judaism.

Be Our Guest

Are you known for your fluffy matzoh balls and your big heart? If yours is the home where there’s always room for more guests, let us know! Help Temple continue its tradition of boundless hospitality by opening your table to additional guests who need a place to go for first seder. And if you’re a guest in search of an open table, you’ve come to the right place, too.

Now that’s hospitality! Contact Debbie Fuqua to offer your table or to be matched. dfuqua@tedallas.org

Make Room for Prayer

March 30: Greet Shabbat at Temple before you head to your seder with a short service at 5pm in Stern Chapel.

March 31: Shabbat morning service, 10:30am, Stern Chapel

April 6: Festival morning service with yizkor, 10:30am, Stern Chapel

Four Questions and Beyond

Oh, the questions! How can I keep my kids engaged during the seder? What do I bring if I’m a guest? Is it ok to eat rice and beans? Why do my Shearith relatives celebrate eight days instead of seven? Check out our Passover page on tedallas.org for plenty of resources to help you get even smarter about Passover practice. We may not have all the answers, as practices vary widely, but we promise to give you a place to get started. tedallas.org/prayer/passover

One Plea, Many Voices for Freedom

Because there’s more that unites than divides us, make plans to attend the 6th Annual JCRC Interfaith Seder. Rabbi Debra Robbins will be participating, along with clergy across Greater Dallas, for this seder honoring the legacy of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Thursday, March 22, 6:30pm, Shearith Israel, 9401 Douglas Ave.

Led by Rabbi Elana Zelony of Congregation Beth Torah and the Most Reverend Edward J. Burns, Bishop of the Catholic Diocese of Dallas, with remarks by Marvin Ellison, CEO of JCPenney.

Passover has so many wonderful themes—freedom, spring, redemption, delicious foods. Then why do so many of us approach it with anxiety, particularly around the seder, the foods we cook and how we prep our kitchens for a chametz-free week? Rabbi Elyse Goldstein of Toronto, Ontario tackles this question on reformjudaism.org in her article “Five Easy Steps for Keeping Passover Simple.” Her suggestions include increasing mindfulness in the foods we buy; giving ourselves permission to eat kitnyot, the foods that raise so many questions during the holiday, and enjoying pretty spring days by spending time outside.

“What can be more meaningful that celebrating spring, freedom, family, community, knowledge, gratefulness and Jewish unity,” she asks. “Don’t let the food get in the way! Instead, enjoy a change of diet for a week and embrace the challenge. My formula is what I like to call KISS: Keep It Simple, Semites! You’ll find yourself lamenting a lot less—and maybe even enjoying the holiday.”

As you embark on this month’s journey from Adar to Nisan, may your crossings be filled with the joy of our ancient story, made forever new as each year we come together in freedom.
