A Shofar Blast of Hope over Despair

Rabbi David Stern

Perhaps it is true every year, but this year's Rosh Hashanah season of renewal seems to come at the time when we need it most. The pandemic and its variants continue among us, American society is riven by deep political divides, war in Ukraine has faded from the headlines but not from the front lines, state legislation in Texas threatens reproductive and religious freedom and creates fear for families of children seeking to affirm diverse gender identities. Our friends are either outraged or resigned. We are awake and aware but dispirited. We know we are not our best America. We sense that we are not our best selves.

In the face of all those challenges, our accustomed greeting of "Shanah Tovah!" can ring hollow. We can almost hear the snicker of our doubting selves: "A good year? What's so good about it?"

But there is another sound to these days — beyond our reflexive greetings, beyond the voices of public vitriol and righteous protest and private pain. When we hear the shofar's first t'kiah, for all its familiarity, we are jolted toward something new. Maimonides taught that the message of the shofar is Uru uru yeshenim — "Awake you slumberers from your sleep!" Some years, with Maimonides, I understand our slumber to be the sleep of complacency, all the daily routines and misplaced priorities which can blind us to higher callings and deeper truths.

But this year, I wonder if that first piercing sound might be aimed directly at our resignation and despair. This year, I wonder if Rosh Hashanah might arrive just in time to jolt us toward a sense of the possible, as unlikely or risky as it might feel. Our sense of overwhelm is legitimate, but it also ends up as justification for a dangerous stasis. The shofar offers the sound of hope: not as a lullaby, but as an awakening. Whether your sense of God is personal or abstract, doubting or secure, the message playing underneath every note and syllable of the High Holy Days is that we participate in a world of possibility greater than we ourselves can readily see. And that is why we need the wake-up call. In the words of our Rosh Hashanah machzor, "Our hopes make us partners in creation, pursuers of peace, people who aspire to a world of justice." Jewish hope is not a finish line, it's a starting line — not an anesthetic, but a challenge.

In her poem "Dead Stars," U.S. Poet Laureate Ada Limón reminds us of our potential:

Look, we are not unspectacular things.

We've come this far, survived this much. What would happen if we decided to survive more? To love harder? What if we stood up with our synapses and flesh and said, No, No, to the rising tides.

Stood for the many mute mouths of the sea, of the land?

What would happen if we used our bodies to bargain for the safety of others, for earth ... if we stopped being terrified?

Limón's words sound like a shofar call to me, a call to hope and power and courage as one.

In August, we lost David McCullough, the great teller of our American story. In an interview with the New York Times in 1992, McCullough said, "People often ask me if I'm working on a book. That's not how I feel. I feel like I work in a book."

That wisdom, too, is a shofar sound. We are not called to live on hope, as if hope were some manna that will nourish us from above, some commodity detached from who we are. We are called to live in hope: to make the choices, speak the words, manifest the courage, share the compassion, dare the love — through which we can rediscover and recreate the wholeness that has been in God's sometimes shattered world all along.

The shofar calls us to hope. We are not, after all, unspectacular things.

In the Torah

The Torah portions of September and October start with the legal intricacies of Deuteronomy, attempting to create order in a wilderness community finding its way. They end with glimpses of a world forming from chaos, and the ongoing quest to bring light into the darkness.

Endings and beginnings, beginnings and endings. Summer's over, school years and full calendars are upon us. We greet a new year of the Jewish spirit, bid a decisive good-bye to the year past. Sometimes change is swift and noisy, and sometimes it is quiet, a faint whisper of the heart.

On the Shabbat of Sept. 16-17, before we observe S'lichot, Deuteronomy sums up the season in Chapter 28 v. 6: "Blessed shall you be in your comings and blessed shall you be in your goings." May the rich season ahead bring order into a packed schedule, light into shorter days and the clearest of vision on all your journeys.

MOMENTS OF WELCOME

At Shabbat

This year, Welcome Shabbat became Welcome 1-2-3 as we celebrated our new members at three different services on Aug. 26 and Sept. 9: Tot Shabbat and the Shabbat Evening Service on Aug. 26, and All-In Shabbat on Sept. 9. Pictured: The Aug. 26 service in Stern Chapel also featured a monthly birthday blessing.

At Home

Members of two communities, regular attendees of the Shabbat morning service and the daily minyan, came together to support Ernest Richards in his new home. "The chanting of v'ahavtah was amazing as we prepared to put the mezuzah on the front door. It was very wonderful to see these two supportive communities come together, in person, to celebrate," said Rabbi Debra Robbins.

MORNING MINYAN UPDATE: NEW ZOOM LINK

The Morning Minyan, which meets Sunday through Friday at 8:15AM, has a new Zoom link, available in the Monday Weekly Update and the Thursday Guide to Shabbat. To request that the link be sent to you via email, contact Susan Chazanow, thesusu@tx.rr.com.

SACRED HELPERS

Of all the wonderful things that happen at Temple during the rest of the year, the High Holy Days show off our beloved congregation at its best. They are both an intensely personal spiritual reset and a joyous communal embrace.

Through it all, an army of volunteers works with our clergy and staff to ensure the best possible experience for all. Meet four super volunteers whose efforts these past weeks and months will be part of every congregant's journey to the joy and wholeness of the High Holy Days. And be sure to catch the next issue of The Window, when each and every volunteer will be thanked by name.

Putting Hospitality First: Debbie Andres

Temple Vice President Debbie Andres, whose portfolio is sacred gatherings, is chair of the High Holy Days Committee, a group working to ensure the best High Holy Days experience for all. In her own words:

Over the past several months, Rabbi Debra Robbins has emphasized hospitality in our High Holy Days planning. It's a word that I have always assumed referred to the hotel industry, but hospitality is actually referenced in the Torah. Our focus this year is ensuring that the HHD experience is not only spiritual and meaningful, but thoughtful, warm and accessible.

The registration process has been simplified and is much easier to navigate and make changes if needed. Congregants will receive their own personal QR code which will allow them entry into any service they register to attend. Admissions cards for individual services are no longer needed. And, for those who will be joining services from home, they can simply log on to the Temple website home page and click the link to join the livestream.

We have been so blessed to have a corps of dedicated ushers from Brotherhood over the years. This year, the greeting team has expanded to include the Board of Trustees, Women of Reform Judaism, committed chairs and even our older students. All of us will join clergy and staff to share new year's greetings with members as you arrive at Temple.

Regardless of whether you plan to attend our Temple services from the seats in Olan Sanctuary, Stern Chapel or in your living room, we hope everyone feels a sense of joy, appreciation and hopefulness that this new year brings.

A Welcoming Face for 35 Years: Jamie Hayden

Jamie Hayden attends each and every High Holy Days service, but you'll rarely see him sitting. For more than 35 years, he has been a go-to volunteer, doing his part to start the new year off right by making sure members and guests have a pleasant experience.

"I started ushering through the Brotherhood, and then I focused on helping fix problems in the access area," Jamie says. "I feel connected with Judaism by serving others; that works for me."

Jamie, former chair of the High Holy Days Committee, is aware that sometimes getting into Temple's large building is a challenge, and he's worked with many people over the years to ensure access for all, including finding space for wheelchairs and walkers; creating special access seating and securing aids for hearing and vision assistance.

"This year, I'm looking forward to having a full Olan Sanctuary, and having to open up the stage in the back of Tobian Auditorum. "I'm really hoping we'll get to see people back."

He's heard everything, and can't get enough: "Every single year I hear it's too hot and too cold; the rabbi's sermon is great or crazy; it's the worst or greatest service ever. And all of it is what you'd expect. Having people in the building brings Temple alive."

Jon and Brady Karp

Hearing the Call: Jon Karp

Jon Karp grew up at Temple and started sounding the shofar during the High Holy Days when he was just 19. Now, coming up on his 36th anniversary year, Jon is proud to be part of a legacy of b'aalei t'kiah, sounders of the shofar.

"The whole purpose of the sounding of the shofar is to stir and wake up the souls of those hearing it. As the person sounding the shofar, you enable everyone listening to fulfill the mitzvah, which is hearing the sounds of the shofar, not creating the sounds."

Jon has always believed that the more people sounding, the more impactful the sound. Over the years, Jon has recruited many others to the shofar practice, including his own children.

"Every year someone tells me how hearing the shofar was the most spiritually moving moment of the Holy Days for them, that is how I know the true impact of my role," he says.

The Torahs: Jan Timmons

For about 20 years, Jan Timmons has been rolling, moving and keeping track of all 13 Torahs that Temple owns and uses. Throughout the year, you can find her getting the Torahs to their correct portion for b'nai mitzvah students, Saturday morning Torah readers and our clergy. During the High Holy Days, Jan ensures that the Torahs are rolled and in order and spends time during services in the choir loft being the human behind the "Torah cam."

"The Torahs are very sacred and symbolic of all of Judaism," she says. "Being able to engage with them truly is sacred work. I love getting to appreciate the hard work that goes into making each Torah scroll beautiful and unique."

Heart to Table

OUR JEWISH FOOD STORIES

Even if you don't cook, hold on to those recipes. And if you do cook, lucky you. That precious family recipe is about so much more than satisfying hunger. Whether scribbled on a card that's now faded from use or sent digitally by a loved one, that treasured recipe is part of your story.

"Our olfactory senses are the closest to memory," says Tina Wasserman, co-chair along with Erin Zopolsky of Temple's Harvest celebrations to kick off the TE150 year. "For instance, I can remember walking out of the elevator at my grandmother's apartment building and smelling chicken soup and brisket. You just knew you were at Grandma's."

Tina, a chef, author, consultant and food columnist, teaches that "Our stories are recipes, our recipes become stories." She'll be leading a challah-braiding workshop on Oct. 16 with Zachary Moskowitz, and co-leading a cooking demonstration on Oct. 26, along with Eli Cohn-Wein and Sophie Zuckerman.

(Hungry yet? The cooking demo will feature four delicious dishes: Syrian smoked eggplant; laffa, a Middle Eastern bread; apple-filled Jewish star challah and molten chocolate cookies.)

Scan for TE150 recipe collection. More recipes will be added throughout the Harvest events.

Every family has its recipes, whether they harken from Brooklyn seder tables, Southern picnics, Texas farms or African villages. "You've got recipes that go back generations, and the family is holding on to some of those. It reminds them of the ancestors that came before them," Tina says.

Members of five Temple families, some that reach back generations and some that look to the future, shared some favorite recipes and the precious memories that accompany them. Each recipe is accessible via a QR code, pictured left. Just point your phone camera and enjoy the recipe. If you'd like a file to print out yourself, email templecommunications@tedallas.org.

The Kleinman Family

Ruthie Kleinman's Carrot Pudding

By Betsy Kleinman

Ruthie became my mother-in-law in 1984 when I was 21, so I feel that she was as much a mother to me as she was a mother-in-law. Most of my memories of my mother-in-law, now of blessed memory, revolved around dinners, and mostly Shabbat or holiday. She was the happiest when preparing a festive meal, for her entire family, and hosting at her home. My favorite memory is the preparation, and publication of a Kleinman Family Cookbook compiled by my sister-in-law and brother-in-law Lisa Umholtz and Lee Kleinman, filled with favorite recipes, along with family pictures galore. I often look through this cookbook, not just for a recipe, but to remember our shared experiences as a family. I think the melding of food, Jewish traditions and family is encapsulated in this book, and that it is the best representation of exactly who my mother-in-law was, and what she valued.

Betsy is one of the four co-chairs of the TE150 Ensuring Our Future Endowment Campaign. She is married to Mark Kleinman, one of five sons of Ruthie and Harold Kleinman of blessed memory.

Mattie Blum Flaxman's Matzah Ball Soup and Beccie Epstein Linz Recipes

By Suzi Greenman and Peggy Millheiser

Our father, Carl Blum Flaxman, was active in Jewish affairs throughout his life. Dad joined Temple Emanu-El in 1943 after he and Mom married and settled in Dallas. Dad served as a teacher in Temple's religious school, as president of Temple's Brotherhood and ultimately as president of the congregation. Our father loved his mother's recipe for matzah ball soup, and we looked forward to having it every year at Passover. In this recipe, the matzah balls are meant to be very dense and small. We've been told that this recipe was popular throughout the Jewish community in the South. It appears in "The Settlement Cookbook" and is called Matzos Dumplings Matzos Kloese.

Beccie and Simon Linz were our great grandparents on our mother's side of the family. Upon moving to Dallas, they joined Temple Emanu-El and became the first of five generations of the Linz-Kahn family to study, learn and worship at our congregation. Our mother, Edna Linz Kahn Flaxman, was a lifelong member, attended Sunday School here, and watched all three of her daughters be confirmed and married here. She served on the Board of Temple's WRJ (then Sisterhood) and on Temple's Worship Committee. She also was the co-founder with Gerry Cristol, of Temple's Archives Committee.

The two recipes from our great grandmother, Beccie Linz, were hand-written in a small "Webster Composition" Book that we inherited. Delmonico's was a famous New York City restaurant, and we found multiple variations of the Delmonico Pudding recipe on the internet. It is thought to be a precursor to Baked Alaska. We don't know who Ella is, but many of the recipes in Beccie's book, such as Ella's sliced pickles, appear to come from friends whose names are placed by each recipe.

Suzi Greenman is co-chair of TE150 and a past president of Temple. Peggy Millheiser is a Dallas real estate agent. In this photo, mom Edna is holding up a matzoh and she and Peggy are displaying hands covered in delicious dough!

The Papert Family: Lee, Peggy, Sammy, Ida and Sam, 1994

Ida Papert's State Fair of Texas Blue Ribbon Watermelon Rind Preserves

By Peggy Papert

Both my parents' families did not have much of the traditional Jewish foods growing up in the South, but Mom loved entertaining and giving food, meals and other goodies to people when they were sick or when someone had died. Many of the older adults at Temple were friends of my parents and received some of her loving kindness in the form of food. She abided by the verse in Leviticus, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

Mom started a 20-year fundraiser called the Farmers Market Hoe Down. During Mom's time with the Farmers Market Friends, she initiated cooking classes led by some of the best chefs in Dallas. And now, there is a small teaching garden in her honor by one of the sheds. She was such an incredible volunteer for the city from local, state and national politics, to being the head volunteer coordinator for the World Cup in Dallas in 1984 and serving as the president of the Dallas Park Board. She was the also president of Temple Emanu-El's Sisterhood in the '60s.

Peggy is a former member of the Board of Trustees and a former staff member at Temple Emanu-El.

Aunt Goldie's Mandel Brot and Mom's Strawberry Pie

By Julie Tobolowsky

I remember asking my grandmother, Edna Zale of blessed memory, about why there were so many people at family gatherings, and she said: 'If it walks, kiss it. If it doesn't, eat it.' I come from a long line of great cooks and bakers. Family and food and business were always tied together. My parents loved making Aunt Goldie Persky's mandel bread together and giving it out to family and friends. I lost my mother, Barbara Zale, earlier this year so the memory is especially sweet. I also remember my mom's strawberry pie, included in Temple's 'From Generation to Generation' cookbook. Mom made it often for everyone, especially her grandchildren and great-grandchildren. Of course, she thought it needed more strawberries so she doubled the original.

Julie, co-owner of JK Chocolate, has carried on the family cooking tradition.

Zachary Moskowitz's Cinnamon Rolls

My favorite recipe is my cinnamon roll recipe, which was adapted from my great grandmother's recipe. It ties to our family because for every important event, I make it. It's something that is kind of a congratulatory gift to our family members.

Zachary, also known as Chef Z, loves to cook and is often seen in the halls of Temple handing out fresh-baked challah that he's taught ECEC, YL+E or Temple campers to make. He'll be participating in the challah-braiding workshop on Oct. 16.

GOIN' TO THE DELIVERY ROOM THIS FALL

Temple's popular class for young families is returning on Oct. 30! Join facilitators Lauren New and Elena Paull for four Sunday morning get-togethers and a Saturday evening Havdalah. The class will explore resources for Jewish parenting and be a gathering spot for parents to get to know one another.

Lauren, a native of El Paso, is a nurse-midwife, and recently became a certified mohellette (female mohel). She and her husband, Seth, are the proud parents of Judah.

Elena, a native of Dallas who grew up at Temple Emanu-El, spent her summers at Greene Family Camp. She works for the Union for Reform Judaism, where she gets to create experiences that help people bring Judaism into their everyday lives. She and her husband, Andrew, are proud parents of Micah.

All Sunday classes will be held from 9:45-11AM on Oct. 30, Nov. 13, Dec. 4 and Dec. 11. Havdalah will be held on Dec. 17.

SHELLY SENDER TO LEAVE ECEC IN MAY 2023

Shelly Sender has announced that this will be her last school year as director of the Early Childhood Education Center. She has accepted an exciting opportunity to lead Compass School of Texas, a new school for children in grades K-8.

In her 15 years with Temple, Shelly has guided the school using the Reggio Emilia philosophy of child-centered education; has overseen the third cycle of accreditation through the National Association for the Education of Young Children; and has brought back the kindergarten classes. The school is in the process of becoming an International Baccalaureate preschool. But most of all, Shelly's warmth and absolute commitment to every child and family have been indelibly stamped on the Early Childhood Education Center community.

Michelle Whitman will be chairing the internal search committee that will include input from a diverse group, including parents of current and former students, the ECEC Steering Committee, the ECEC educators, Temple leadership and other early childhood experts.

For questions related to the search, contact Executive Director Meredith J. Fried,

Celebration and Remembrance

B'NAI MITZVAH SPOTLIGHT: DUSTIN SAYAH

Dustin Sayah and his dad, Jon, traveled to Israel this summer in anticipation of his bar mitzvah on Sept. 10. Before he left, Rabbi Debra Robbins gave some tzedakah money for him to distribute while he was there. Here in his own words:

We had a great time. We spent a few days up north by the Sea of Galilee, in Tel Aviv and in Jerusalem. We spent a couple of days touring the Old City, the markets in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem, and visiting with my relatives. My cousin is a Hasidic Jew and has 12 children and over 50 grandchildren. We met some of them one day and I gave the only boy there the dollar you gave me. The other boys had to study during our visit so only the girls could meet with us. We also went to Yad Vashem. One detail really moved me: You started out on a concrete floor and ended up on carpet; it represented a sense of hope after the Holocaust. I donated a dollar there too. We went to the (Western) Wall on Shabbat which was really cool.

Leaving the Food Desert

How faith, public policy and the private sector join forces to end hunger in Dallas

November 3, 2022 | 6:15PM, Vegan Reception | 7PM, Stern Chapel and Online

Rabbi Dr. Schmuly Yanklowitz, keynote speaker

Rabbi Dr. Yanklowitz is a renowned activist, educator and author. He is the founder of Valley Beit Midrash, a global, pluralistic nonprofit for Jewish ethics. After his presentation, he will moderate a panel discussion.

Peter Brodsky

Peter Brodsky is a Temple member and former private-equity investor who is focused on educating underserved Dallas youth, redeveloping RedBird Mall and working to improve economic conditions in South Dallas.

Benaye Wadkins Chambers

Benaye Wadkins Chambers is executive director of Crossroads Community Services, a 20-year-old organization that manages a food pantry, provides education and research, and coordinates the distribution of food through 150 community partners.

The symposium is one of many exciting events planned for TE150, a celebration of Temple Emanu-El's 150th birthday. The 15-month celebration includes three distinct seasons, aligned with Jewish values and the Jewish calendar: Harvest (Fall 2022); Creations (Winter and Spring 2023) and Rededication (Fall 2023).

This symposium honors the memory of Henry D. Schlenger, known for his personal integrity and outstanding service to the congregation and community. Schlenger served as president of Temple Emanu-El and the Dallas Bar Association.

TRIBE VIBE BY AMBER PIERCE

The Leaning Sukkah and Other Adventures

The year we got married, Sam and I were sitting in Yom Kippur services at Temple, and after an announcement about upcoming events in the Temple sukkah, Sam turned to me and said, “Let’s build a sukkah!” I thought he was joking, as neither of us grew up with a sukkah in our backyard or even observing Sukkot. But, Sam was set in his decision and spent the next week shopping for materials, researching how to build a sukkah, and constructing one in our backyard. That first year, our sukkah leaned to one side. It fell over by the second or third night. I thought that was the end of our Sukkot adventures, but the following year, Sam was determined to get our sukkah back up and more stable. That year, it did stand up the whole week, but it still leaned a bit. Over the years, Sam perfected our sukkah. He doubled it in size, got more efficient at quickly building it, and has added lights and decoration. In the past couple years, we’ve started asking our guests to write their names on the sukkah, and it’s one of my favorite things to look around the structure and see the names of our loved ones.

One night, when Banner was 3 and Quinn was 1, we made a Southern-style meal, and I just happened to call it “Southern Sukkah” in a FaceBook post. The following night, the Plano Fire Department had open houses for Fire Prevention Week. We had plans to take the boys to our local fire house, so I made a meal that was fire-themed and called it our “Fire Sukkah.” It kind of took on a life of its own after that. And, once the boys were old enough to remember each year before, they began getting excited to come up with themes and ideas with me. Now, it’s a full-blown craziness that we start planning for in July.

The boys will help add to our ever-growing list of ideas throughout the year, so we have plenty of theme nights to choose from. At the same time, our themes have gotten crazier and more intense

These pictures show some of our favorites. As much as the sukkah shenanigans and the themes can get kind of overwhelming, I absolutely love the memories we are making with the boys and with our friends and family who join us.

This year’s Sukkot plans are well under way. I hope however you celebrate the holiday that you do so with the people who bring you joy. Be creative and have fun!

Backwards Sukkah was Sam’s favorite. Maybe it was the backwards name tags or that we got to eat dessert first and had appetizers at the end of the meal or wearing clothes backwards that he liked. Either way, it was a fun (and easy) one!

Banner loved the Willy Wonka Sukkah. I think he loved that we watched the movie in the sukkah, enjoyed my homemade lickable wallpaper, and ate the teacups for dessert.

Understandably so, Quinn’s favorite is the one he came up with last year: the Idiom Sukkah! He really used his noodle on this one, and he didn’t have to butter me up to agree to it! A cloud-9 cake, candy from a baby, bigger fish to fry, spilled beans, (not so) cold turkey, silver platters, and eggs in a basket were just a few items in our spread.

Returning to Psalm 27

The popular adult learning class, led by Rabbi Debra Robbins, is on Wednesdays at 9AM on Zoom through October 12.

Using Rabbi Robbins' book, "Opening Your Heart With Psalm 27," participants will engage in the practice of reciting the psalm daily for 52 days, from Elul through just after Simchat Torah. The book offers a structure that includes reading, reflecting and writing for a few minutes each day.

Let the wisdom of our ancient poetry guide you through this reflective period, whether you've established reading Psalm 27 over the past three years since Rabbi

Robbins' book was published, or whether you're trying it for the first time.

Israel Connections

By Livia Bernstein

Fostering a meaningful relationship and personal relationship with the land, people and culture of Israel allows us to stay connected with Jewish people and Jewish values around the world. Whether your connection comes from unique and delicious Israeli foods, or from gaining a deeper understanding of the important work Israeli organizations are doing, there's a piece of Israel for everyone.

Enjoy this mini-glossary of favorite Israeli foods offered by 'Cantor in the Kitch' Leslie Niren

Arayes: Middle Eastern street food of meat stuffing in grilled or pan-fried pita

Baklavah: Middle Eastern dessert with many varieties of ingredients including phyllo dough, butter, pistachios, cashews, walnuts and sugar syrup

Bourekas: Puff pastry filled with cheese, potato and other vegetables from the Balkan countries, most notably Turkey and Greece

Fattoush: Salad with pita chips, likened to a Middle Eastern panzanella. Sumac is the secret ingredient.

Knafeh: Middle Eastern sweet cheese pastry dessert, made with semolina dough or spun pastry called kataifi. Both are soaked in sugar syrup and flavored with rose water or orange blossom water. It's often colored with orange food dye.

Khachapuri: Fluffy Georgian cheese bread in a boat shape with cheese and a runny egg in the center

Malabi: Persian milk pudding flavored with rose water and garnished with chopped nuts (like panna cotta)

Maqluba: Upside down chicken and rice dish, that is cooked and flipped onto a serving plate to form an impressive tower of food.

These two Israeli organizations embody the values of tzedeq (justice), kelilah kedoshah (holy community) and reut (friendship). They are organizations that our members experienced on the two Israel trips this summer.

YAD LAKASHISH

Yad LaKashish was founded in 1962 by Myriam Mendilow as a way for the elderly in Jerusalem to regain a sense of self-worth through creative work opportunities. Today, Yad LaKashish consists of over 300 people and 10 workshops where they continue to empower older people and give them a sense of community and belonging that they often don't have elsewhere. Yad LaKashish is also dedicated to changing the attitudes that younger generations have towards the elderly by showing them that elderly members of society can be active contributors to the community.
